

ALWAYS THE SAME

If a civilization starts to flourish all the other nations start to pour into this civilization in order to enjoy an easier life. Do you remember what happened in the ancient Egypt? Once they established their own empire after being victorious in their struggle with the nature and the Nile River, and began to develop. The neighbouring tribes and nations also started their own migration. Everybody brought his skills and experience and all this resulted an exponential development. This was how Joseph, in the Bible and his family, got new opportunities under the non-Egyptian Hyksos dynasty that were ruling Egypt at that time. Joseph was lucky (with the grace of God) because he “got a job” but millions were there as slaves.

Beside the skills each nation brought his gods and faith, too. Can you imagine that in the Hellenized Egypt during the Ptolemaios rulers how many gods were in function? There were all those who were followed by the previous generations plus the Syrianic plus Zorohustra plus the Medianic plus...a lot. The gods and faiths were in practice and fighting between each other. Monotheism, Politheism and each of them in different forms. After Christianity appeared in Alexandria in the first century A.C. transported by those “illegal workers” or “border jumpers” from the land of Juda the religious and cultural screen changed. A new type of fermentation took place. That Christianity melted some elements of the Alexandrian colorful reality to itself and from this very complex and complicated mixture two lines of Christianity started to raise up. The one under Presbyter Arius who witnessed the onness of God. This Arianic line later led to the Unitarism...and the other under Bishop Athanasius who set the base of the Trinity...

I'm not going to make a further follow up...but what happened in these 3-5 thousands of years in Egypt? One pharao followed by the other and one dynasty after the other and one nation after the other and gods after gods and faiths after faiths.

Question: Which faith was ruling always?

Answer: The faith, which was supported with the strongest army and economy, was always ruling.

Question: Was the religion that was revealed by God supported by rulers?

Answer: Ask Moses...he knows. So always those ideas occupied the brains and local thinking that was supported by human power and tyrannical rulers. And as a result not the will of God was spread in the name of God but something else...

What is today? The same. People are migrating from poor places to rich places. Even today there are “flourishing poles” where people expect and dream about a better life. They go to USA, Canada, Australia, South Africa etc. And these big economies are melting those skills and brains into themselves. Some of those are lucky like Joseph but the majority are social slaves...However these people bring their culture and faith, too!!! What will come out from all of these mixtures? Now you can see...The one with military and economical support is dominating. We didn't change...We mankind remained the same...Please God. Come and help
